MARKET COMMENTARY

September saw mixed performances across global equity markets as investors balanced resilient economic activity and corporate earnings against renewed inflation concerns, higher energy prices and a less supportive outlook for interest rates. In the US, the technology-heavy Nasdaq rose by 1.9%, supported by continued optimism around AI-related investment and the earnings outlook for large technology companies. The S&P 500 was broadly flat, declining by 0.3%, as strength in parts of the technology sector was offset by the pressure of higher bond yields on equity valuations. European markets were weaker during the month. The Euro STOXX 50 fell by 2.2%, while the FTSE 100 declined by 2.0%, as rising energy costs and uncertainty surrounding inflation and monetary policy weighed on sentiment. Fixed income markets also came under pressure as investors reassessed the likely path of interest rates. In the US, the 10-year Treasury yield rose by 54 basis points, reflecting resilient economic data, persistent inflation concerns and expectations that monetary policy would remain restrictive. The UK 10-year gilt yield increased by 36 basis points as investors remained cautious about domestic inflation and the path of interest rates. In commodities, Brent crude oil rose by 14.6% as geopolitical tensions and concerns about potential disruption to Middle Eastern energy supplies increased the risk premium in oil markets. In currency markets, sterling depreciated by 2.1% against the US dollar and appreciated by 0.4% against the euro.
